Health Information Week 4th - 10th July

Health Information Week is a national, multi-sector campaign promoting high quality information for patients and the public. High quality health information can have a huge impact on people's ability to stay healthy and manage illnesses effectively, giving them a better quality of life.

One of the easiest ways to get reliable health information is to use trusted sources. There is lots of information available, particularly online, but it can be hard to verify information which has been shared on a social media site.

What to ask

There are a few simple questions you can ask yourself when looking at health information:

1. Where did the information come from? Who produced it? Was it the NHS or a trusted charity or health organisation? Is the information relevant to the UK?
2. How current is the information? When was it published or last updated? Health information changes over time – make sure it is up to date.
3. Is it easy to use and understand?
4. Is it based on multiple evidence reviews or case studies? Look for clear references.
5. Why has it been produced? Is it to inform or is there an agenda? Is the website profit driven?

It is also a good idea to cross-check information. This means looking to see if it is repeated by more than one reliable source.

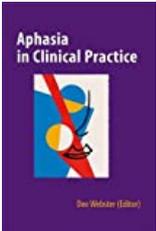

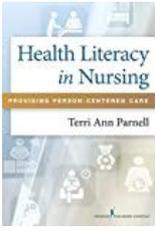

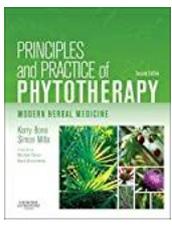

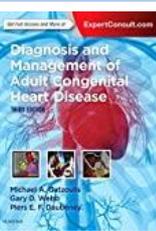

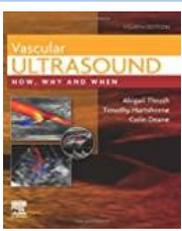

OUTSTANDING CARE
personally DELIVERED

There is also a list of resources available to support people in understanding and managing their health. All the online tools are free to access. A selection is available below and the full collection is available at library.nhs.uk/yhc/
