Leadership

Medical leadership: time for a renewal of the structure and composition of senior management

Matthias Zuchowski and Dennis Henzler argue that healthcare leadership needs to adapt to modern demands, highlighting how the involvement of medically-trained individuals in senior leadership could help to balance clinical and financial needs.

British Journal of Healthcare Management Vol. 29, No. 2 pp. 1-5

Is medical leadership associated with better hospital management? Evidence from a structural analysis of hospitals in Germany

Excellent hospital leadership is essential for the delivery of high-quality care and financial viability of healthcare services. In Germany, the role of chief executive officer of a hospital can be held by an individual with a medical or non-medical background. This study explored the potential differences between the structural and financial parameters of hospitals, depending on the background of their chairperson or chief executive.
