Mental health – an area of high priority in occupational therapy

Outcomes of the Tree Theme Method versus regular occupational therapy: a longitudinal follow-up

Depression and anxiety disorders affect individuals' everyday lives, and treatments that can help them to perform everyday occupations are needed. Occupational therapy for this group has been evaluated from a short-term perspective but not from a long-term perspective; further research is thus warranted. The aim of the study was to investigate the longitudinal outcomes of the Tree Theme Method (TTM provided by occupational therapists, in terms of everyday occupations, psychological symptoms, and health-related aspects.) compared with care as usual
