Miscellaneous
Physical restraint and the law in England George S British Jnl Mental Health Nursing 9 (3) physical restraint
Refining social prescribing in the UK Social prescribing might not be a good phrase for an intervention that has the potential to transform services. It implies the dispensing of interventions, probably of the drug variety, in settings where there are many people present. This is not an attractive notion, implying casual disregard of professional conduct, and is, of course, misleading. Tyrer P, Boardman J Lancet Psychiatry 7 (10) 831-832
From attachment to mental health and back Galbally M et al Lancet Psychiatry 7 (10) 832-834
Principles for designing the built environment of mental health services Although there is an increasing amount of literature on the key principles for the design of mental health services, the contribution of the built environment to outcomes for the service user is a largely neglected area. To help address this gap, we present evidence that highlights the pivotal role of evidence-based architectural design in service users' experience of mental health services. Liddicoat S et al Lancet Psychiatry 7 (10) 915-920
